Australian journalism research index 1992–94

Sharon McHugh

This is the inaugural version of what is planned to be an annual index of Australian journalism and news media-related articles and books. It covers the years 1992–1994 to encompass all issues of ASJ to date. The index is in two main parts: a listing by author, and a listing by subject matter in which an article may appear any number of times. The focus is firmly on Australia and journalism, resisting all temptations to include “communication” or “media studies” texts.

Sharon McHugh is an associate lecturer in journalism at the University of Queensland.
Where is journalism taught in Australia, who teaches it, how many students do they teach; and what form do their courses take? What do the journalism course coordinators around the country think about some of the contentious issues in journalism education, like accreditation, union involvement, equipment needs and shorthand? This article provides some answers based on a preliminary comparative survey of vocation-based journalism courses in Australia. Journalism courses by year started, State, faculty, department and title.

Australia’s main stock index rose above the 6,800 level on Friday, extending gains for a third straight session and on track for its biggest weekly gain in a month as investors bet the rollout of COVID-19 vaccines along with unprecedented government spending would lead to a sustained economic rebound. Still, concerns about rising coronavirus cases and extended economic lockdowns in Europe continued to cap much of the upside momentum. Pilbara Minerals Ltd and Lynas Rare Earths Ltd were the biggest gainers on the ASX, up 5.3% and 3.6%, respectively.
