Stamps

Gail Pittaway

ISBN: 978-0-473-42549-4

Published in 2017, with the support of the Wintec Research Office and TEXT online journal

Illustration: Juliann Smith

A replica of a New Zealand 1942 Health postage stamp

Wintext Publications

HAMILTON
Introduction

Met que quo moluptaqui audion nisciis de nuscidis unt odis milibus ea iduntib ernam, optaquod ditibus sam imusant parum faccusam etur rempere perum sequi blaccab orepredst vidis con es quae. Nem endaere qui cum velite possimus utecab inum nonsequibuscide ni none voluptam, solorro to quam, incem apid et et quist, cus, ommostiaeri verro et mosti rem quo destias modipic tem nobitatet eicidem et valorit atiunte consequatem re ex et et aut landi temque sunt.

Must, quatat que conseque pellam, ut officabo. Nam alis soles minullu ptatem quam, omnis nimusant, quas asin et ra quissincius eatenis sunt por aliquist quate in evel minti doles mod ullam quissim sum arum quasseni doles expedis ellaut qui ocaeq accullu ptatiant utatium fuga. Enistrum resti acessimi, sectassum quis mo vella alis non cuscipsae parchillut am, tem quatiis quidia dolendist, nonsed maionsed molorit atinciendi quiam, to volupta voluptia dolendit vent aut landis doluptis et aspe ad qui culparum nones comninus nietur?
Ecature ssequam et lant, vere net earchillore coribusdae dolupta tiurit mod qui cum simet, eos sit landes in ruptur?
Sincto te cones et dent velessi accessi reiumquias et
My Dad was a postie.
most summers I’d work with him
in the Chief Post Office;
sorting mail into sizes,
stacking parcels,
stamping Christmas through a franking machine.

Sometimes we’d read the postcards in the airmail bin
even though we’d signed a promise.
Once my own hat went into a canvas bag —
who knows where?
It wasn’t stamped or addressed.

I learned there the value of order and submission.
Why parcels must be tied securely,
what happens when the address is wrong;

Impeccable skills for an age where My only letters are bills
and junk mail is so indiscriminating
there is no stamp or address.
The Sunfish on the Stairs

(At the Whanganui Regional Museum)

Sunfish
are a species
that roam the open sea
relying on wind and waves
to carry them from place to place

They are often driven ashore
at high tide and left helpless at the ebb

Such was the fate
Of this specimen.

Found poem: caption under the exhibit.

Note: As a child I would climb up the stairs and stare up at the huge flat disc barely believing it to be a fish. A few years ago I returned and read the caption, now being tall enough. The words presumably by a museum staff member seemed worthy of being exhibited, themselves.
Platonic Rites

Within a walled scented garden
made not only for the blind
they groped a knowledge around the sky
from imprints on warmed flesh.
Animals twitched, dozed, grazed, nudged,
unconcerned at this amiable gaming;
woman, man, flowers, grass, showers, sun —
ancient symbols; their own illumination.

"See the two air currents," he cried,
"How higher clouds waft motionless and lower scud on by!"
But she, sense betrayed
by jabbing rain on sunned flesh, bite of lust and sting of lips
lay rapt, whipped on by another current’s course, blinkerèd to cause, effect, direction, pace.

The Charioteer, who does not show a face
gives rein only for the passage of the skies,
a sun to chase.
Shag Poem

Once near a knobby headland
a shag flung herself to fish
down, direct into the shadowed sea.
Barely a splash betrayed her plunge
no ripples showed her path;

I waited longer than my lungs could bear
to catch the triumphant rise
but she never reemerged.
Upon another rocky beach
self-flung upon hot rocks
my tears dried even as they fell leaving no trace, no stain engrained
and I walked away quite healed.

Now I cannot pass a jagged coast
without remembering
that shag, that shady sea,
those tears on lichened rocks —
both gone mysteriously.
Dreamtime, Troy and Pergamon

We sleep often, and dream much here, in the ruined land.
We greet past shades with brief respect,
then leave them to the longer vigils of reptiles
to whom they now belong.

Did snakes slither around the palace of Eumenes so presumptuously then? Or lizards bask in the Hellenistic sun?
Were the healing waters of Asklepeion
also frog infested?
And the turtles in the holy passages; did Galen kick at their shells distractedly
as he mused upon remedies?

Reptiles lie low, sometimes never strike.
they have waited long for this — coldly, slowly, to encroach upon the powers of the past.
Now, save the odd tourist, cow or goat, who will pass,
they share the shadows only with each other.
Perhaps this is why we, too, lie low and sleep; in dreams we learn from the snakes when to strike. The lizards teach us when to hide, the frogs to plunge; And the turtles teach us to receive the blows and still survive.
Silber See
(For Martin)

We camped that night, in a rusting wood,
By a lake called Silber See.

While dragonflies idled to the lull of the lake and strange night creatures called,
came overhead a slice of new moon
and the ache of an uncanny grief —
the intuition of your Mother’s death.

Another camp, another night
an oval ripe moon in ascendance,
by a weedy backwater, enthralled, we caught
the irregular plop of the fly-catching trout,
the flickering of distant fires —
and you talked with her in a dream.

Two waters, a week, and a moon in the making these icons I take wherever I go:
light on darkness, moon on water —
the depths of pain in your Mother’s eyes.
He seems puzzled.
"Your son?"
"Yes, that’s him in the group of students showing how it’s done".

An awkward pause;
"What brings you here?"
I ask unnecessarily and smile at their youngest.
A gap after the older two, she’s keen to go co-ed next year.

We ramble on a little longer; our kids, the weather, the price of petrol, school bus routes; then smile vaguely as we part.

A charge of sorrow unsteps me then;
I recall
my son, within,
churning resistance
at the hard wooden pew,
while theirs lay still;

the tiny wooden box
barely broaching the altar.

And the guilt
Of bearing life
Rising around me
Like incense and hymns.
Charm
(For Marie Flynn)

Apotropaic magic it’s called when we say "bless you" after a sneeze
or "cross my fingers and hope to die."

As you lay dying
I became uncharacteristically tidy:

of course I gardened
but I scooped up weeds immediately.

Books went into a new book case
in height order

and my wardrobe found itself rearranged
according to cut and season,

while all the hangers were made to primly face the wall.

At the clothesline I recalled your reputation
for organising pegs by colour,

matching them to the clothes.
I drew the line at that but washing has been folded with particular care. Apotropaic magic.

Auspicious, not superstitious you’d have found it propitious that a comet has visited in this of all weeks.

As you catch that comet’s tail perhaps you’ll look down and see My rotary clothes line, like a rainbow tree fern?

In case, today, I’ll hang the clothes in colour bands and size order, with matching pegs:

A Romany rag tree
A Tibetan flag

Your patterning in me.
Leaving
(For Alex)

You leave.
I follow,
turning off
the light, the stereo, the DVD, the computer,
the heater —
gathering mugs, plates,
emptying waste baskets sodden with the cheerful detritus of a visit home.

Your room
still wears your impress.
sheets mangled,
floor a horizontal pile:
discarded clothes, papers, wrappers,
lurid plastic containers still filled with shampoo,
cleanser, toner, deodorant;
al left,
so you can pack tidily
into three recycled carry bags.

You leave
Me empty.
Unleaving
(For Alex)

When you were tiny I’d wait ahead cheering on your tottering steps.

Today you ran ahead, around a bend out of sight, wailing when I caught you up — "I thought you’d left me!"

I did leave you — to run ahead.

You see, I couldn’t keep up with you.

In time you’ll run on, stop looking ahead or behind.

Into time you’ll run on — and leave me standing by.
Missing Track

(For Max)

You are back after a long flight
And, unusually, keep the bedroom door open to allow the lights, sounds and smells of the house to reach and absorb you back home.

You recall how a decade ago you returned and heard the voices of your husband and son,
a low murmur down the hall.
How you could barely distinguish between voices,
both with low tones, an even keel of intonations.

This time no other male voice
just the murmur as your husband cooks for you and coaxes one old cat to eat
while pushing away the young one,
The odd caressing tone with the dog,

The slightest of exclamations
as some ingredient misses the pan,
lands on the floor,
the gentle laugh as the dog cleans it up.
You are home but it is emptier now with the loss of
that one other voice,
indistinguishable then, now absent
— a missing track
on the music of home.
Forensic Jumper
(For Jenny and Mathew in London)

You return my French designed, Italian wool jumper, Animale, by Roger Duc, after I rejected it, too heavy for the flight home to summer.

Now, unpacked, unwashed it traces northern nights dark, long, yet threaded with metallic light.

There’s a whiff — dark slime wintry footpaths, fire, smoke, crisp air.

On the sleeve a daub, warm beer, spilled in laughter in front, a scab of milky sauce some not especially game bird poached in wine.
Hairs of an antipodean cat
spike out, three-toned
and, on the shoulder,
two of my hairs,
six months younger then.

Doubtless, too, residues of skin or scalp
around the neckline
could be scraped or plucked,
sent to laboratories.
All evidence of happy times.
Swansong

(For Pamela Gray)

Today, for you, I braved a storm.
Glutted gutters,
rain swept,
wind poured all over me
and the streets of my town.
Leaves locked on pavement
rubbish brushed at knees
litter collected cowering in corners.
And then you burst upon us full sun-red, yellow-lined, blue-eyed you — brandishing your eyebrows
winding up your voice
sliding down your 'cello
to make your swansong.
Ah, no swansong here, my friend —
more full-throttled, pounding,
new-hatched energy!

Homing,
I shrugged off the storm
like water off a duck’s back.

\(^1\)Pamela Gray is a New Zealand 'cellist, singer and composer, whose work Swan updated Saint-Saëns' The Swan, dying from an oil spill and pollution.
Eight AM.

Daylight saving time…
and the daylight, saved, is grateful.
It is still cool outside;
the time of new beginnings:
the rain has just shaken itself off and drifted away
the garden drunkenly lolls about a bold snail crosses the gravel path.

I break the web that links both sides of the hedge,
there each morning —
a tiny head height thread,
a civic opening ribbon,
a mere distraction as I wipe it away ‘til tomorrow.
I now declare this morning
— Open.
Three Gothic Novels
(In six lines each)

I

'It was evening all afternoon'*
The macrocarpas clumped like clouds along the fence line. The farmer looked at the sky;
"There’s a beauty coming," he said to no one in particular. The blackbirds wheeled and hurried the last chores of the day, then sang short bursts of prayer.

*From Wallace Stevens' Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird

II

Tarnished circle
why do you stay locked on the finger
long after the marriage is over?
   Like him
   you have burrowed your way
   into skin and bone.
III

Watch
where did your name
come from?

Time snatcher,
no amount of watching
will catch you up
What We Did in the Easter Break
(For composition classes everywhere)

We always go somewhere
even if we don’t leave home;
the white room, the dark bed
narrate themselves.

Or even if we travel —
to Taupo or Auckland, say —
it is only to eat and sleep more.

Or at the beach, any beach, say Cooks Beach,
you might lie in a tent,
imagine Kelly Tarltoned waters teaming with night life, grotesque as a Leonardo cartoon —
brother and sister fish eating each other.

Or out at sea,
watch wave-tossed children puke on
their hands,
pieces of dried apricot, sputum
drizzle onto purple books.
Or it might be ANZAC Day
and, all over New Zealand
the RSA, full of smoke and soldiers and tales of smoking guns —
one vast TradeMe site
  — the beaches
  — the beatings
  — the bastards
No holiday.
Unwelcome

The evening you left
I scrubbed down the porch
your base for three months, or more.
You’d brought little,
left with a little more,
and the space, now empty,
barely changed by your stay,
seems pointless somehow.

I’d been waiting for you to go
since you arrived,
but you had babies on the way
seemed so happy and possessive
about the empty old porch,
as if you had lived there before.

So we co-existed for a summer
you on the porch, us inside,
and, occasionally, to wind you up we’d walk out and talk or drink —
or just stand there looking into the distance;
enjoying your annoyance.
When your twins came
we were a little more respectful
after all, that’s why we let you stay.
Apart from the filth and the noise
you were all pretty independent not needing our provisions
while the twins grew strong.

Then one weekend we left you to it and went away to the beach
For one last autumn fling.
When we came back you’d packed up and gone
— all of you —
north I suppose, to another verandah in the sun.

Two swallows may not make a summer, but your departure ended it for us that day.
Pukeko

There is no escape,
you know,
when a

flat-footed flamingo, prideless peacock parrot-marionette, clicking stickbird
of graunchy ruttings and soggy spawnings

tries to out-wit and out-lope
a van
with washing machine mangles out front.

So where are you now half-wit?
Now that your lopers have been lopped —
Those spindle-shanks that cramped and clamped
your style?

Has your soul taken flight at last?
Do you brood and flit above tree tops, squawking
timeless, sexless rhapsodies, Flicking the stench of the swamp
from your angel wings?
Or do you merely decay out-side–in?
Flattened panic in the streets?

A peacock-crimson splat mat
On the tacky tarseal of time?
You are inside, at table
it is twilight, winter, and the house is beginning to distinguish itself,
with light, from the surrounding gloom.
A knock at the door
And a woman, distressed, looks in at you, and says
— Do you own a dog?
  — A Labrador?
— It’s just been killed on the road.

Then, breaking down,
— The bastards, they swerved right at it,
  then just drove off.

So begins the horror.
You gather up the still warm pet,
but, too heavy to carry, you park the car in the middle of the road,
in the dark
roll her into the car boot
and bring her through the gate to bury her.
You dig a grave by torchlight;
so much earth for such a short life
and, sobbing, come in to the fireside,
where the children have laid her in state
on her favourite rug,
scattered with Paris daisies.
— Lottie’s still dead, says Max
as you kneel down.

A year goes by. A knock at the door.
Outside, through the glass, a man in singlet and shorts
one side of his face a livid rash, so the whites of his eyes catch the flash of the kitchen light.

— Do you own stock? He rasps,
His voice sounds threatening.
— No, not at all, not even a dog.

— There’s a beast on the road someways back — Someone needs to get it off, or there’ll be a nasty accident.
Your husband goes with him.
He does not return.

Was it a ruse, you wonder?
How vulnerable you are,
in the country,
in the privacy of night;
that anyone can come
and take your husband away,
to look for a beast that you don’t own.

Eventually you go out to look for him
but there is no sign,
only vast skies
the odd flicker and twitch in the leaves
a distant drone of trains.

You go inside and prepare for life
without a husband.
Anything can happen after all
in the country.
Eventually he comes in and says
  — No sign of the beast.
    But he must be out there somewhere.
Interislander

Be ready to pay the Ferryman –
The cost is higher these days,
   he’ll take credit
old pennies won’t cut it —
but there’s no going between islands without it.

Best to embark on foot
   you won’t need your car at the other end
but you’ll miss the drive up the heavy steel ramp;
   the crew in their heavy gloves steering you about the turning circle, as you shunt around the parking deck and nose in — each park a harbour, a bay.

No, instead, walk up the hot gangway
   Through the glass covered tunnel,
avoiding the heels of the folk ahead.
   No-one, you notice, has luggage.
It’s crowded at first; in the jostling
you worry about security, then remember you don’t have a bag; all you have is the means To pay, not yet taken
and there’s still no sign of the Ferryman.
Perhaps he’s on the radio to the next port,
checking the weather,
taking soundings? Making the passage right.

So you go on deck to look at the city behind —
Already dwindling to flat pack blocks
and plastic towers.
Avoiding a funnel, weird tubes and pipes,
places you can’t enter, you find
A piece of rail to hang over and watch
As wharf cranes semaphore
The music of the spheres.
With hardly a lurch, the ferry pulls out and you are suddenly inter-island. Ahead, as yet invisible, the other shore, the island which you are inter; as over the Tannoy loudspeaker, the Ferryman welcomes you aboard.
I’d Like to Be*

I’d like to be sung:
a tune that is versatile
a ditty pretty enough,
yet simple, to hum.

I could be played on the radio,
or taught to children
who’d shout me out
at the tops of voices
in school assemblies
and dingy halls.
Or Else.

Perhaps an orchestra
might arrange me.
Or a rapper?
Even a folk band would do.

In the morning
I could bugle people to work.
At night babies would sleep
against the deep hum of their father’s chests;
to me.
In time, snatches of my rhythms
might repeat in the memories of listeners
long after I have gone out of fashion.

*In response to Glenn Colquhoun’s poem I’d Like to be a Story.
Author’s note

Gail lives in the lush Waikato region of New Zealand and lectures at Wintec in Creative writing, Media theory, and Drama and Storytelling on the Bachelor of Media Arts and Graduate Diploma in Communication programmes.

Several of these poems have been published in TEXT online journal and I gratefully acknowledge the support of Professor Donna Lee Brien who has championed my writing – both as poet and academic.